-Your "MEMORIES IN THE MAKING"

There is something magical about discovering a hidden gem, crown jewels, cellar collections and the world out there!

Dear Dreamcatchers,

Some journeys begin long before we pack a suitcase. A photograph catches our eye, someone shares a favourite place, and suddenly we are imagining ourselves there. That spirit of discovery runs through our November edition.

In Crown Jewels, we follow Cape Town's coastline as summer approaches, exploring its colourful neighbourhoods, ocean views and beautiful places to stay. Our Cellar Collection takes us to Posterity Ciderworks in California, where local ingredients and personal stories bring another kind of discovery to the glass.

This month also holds something close to my heart: Marika and Mikaela's South Korea adventure, shared through their own memories and photographs. Their story is an invitation to our readers—your travels, unexpected discoveries and treasured moments have a place in Dreamcatcher too.

To help you begin, our guest writing mentor, Zachary Reichel, offers practical encouragement in Your Journey, Your Words. A favourite photograph could be the beginning of a story someone else will love reading.

Our Dreamcatcher Golf Network carries that same spirit onto the fairways, bringing golf, destination experiences and the pleasure of travelling together into the Dreamcatcher journey.

Each feature can also be enjoyed and shared as a standalone edition. Here, they come together in one magazine, with photographs, films and stories to explore at your own pace.

Pour yourself something lovely, settle into your favourite chair, and let your imagination wander. Your next memory might begin on the very next page. With love and a little wanderlust,

THROUGH MARIKA'S EYES

A dream journey, a daughter's surprises, and memories made together.

On 22 June 2026, Marika Verster left O.R. Tambo International Airport carrying something rather special: a little lucky elephant, given to her by her daughter, Mikaela.

Ahead lay South Korea—a destination she had dreamed of visiting. What followed would become a collection of firsts, happy tears and small moments that still pull her thoughts back to Seoul.

Marika shares her journey:

First, there was Singapore, with just thirty minutes to reach my connecting gate. Then came Incheon, a memorable seafood-in-a-bag lunch, and the excitement of finding my way somewhere entirely new.

Armed with Naver Maps, Google Translate and an eSIM, I began my adventure. My Korean language skills might have been limited, but my determination certainly wasn't.

Jet lag had its own plans. On my first full day, I woke at half past twelve—an unexpected reminder that travelling across the world takes a little adjustment.

Soon, though, I was out exploring.

The journey from Incheon to Seoul brought hundreds of photographs and an almost overwhelming sense of happiness. This was the place I had imagined. Now I'm here, finding my own way through it.

Seoul unfolded one walk at a time: station stairways, narrow streets, old Korean architecture and the pleasure of discovering what lay around the next corner.

Marika laughingly describes the walking as "millions of steps"—and anyone who has explored a city with an eager heart will understand.

Some places drew me back. Cheonggyecheon Stream became one of them, somewhere I returned to several times during my stay.

My explorations took me to Gyeongbokgung Palace, Bukchon Hanok Village, Dongdaemun Design Plaza and Jungnang Rose Park. Each added another impression to a city already filling my camera and my heart.
Then there was the food.

At Gwangjang Market, I tried kimchi and chicken feet. Cold noodles and Korean barbecue brought more discoveries, turning meals into part of the adventure. For me, tasting my way through Korea was another way of getting to know it.

And then Mikaela arrived.

What had begun as a personal adventure became a mother-and-daughter journey, with surprises that repeatedly left me searching for words.

For my fifty-eighth birthday, Mikaela arranged a visit to see HYBE, a Korean barbecue meal at a restaurant where BTS had eaten, and a cable car trip up to Namsan Tower.

For a mother already living a dream, sharing these experiences with my daughter made them even more precious.

Another surprise took us onto the water: a yacht trip that gave us a view of the Moonlight Rainbow Fountain at Banpo Bridge.

It became another of those moments I remember with wonder.

Among our favourite discoveries was Café Pokpo, overlooking the waterfall beside Hongjecheon Stream in Seoul's Seodaemun district.

With water tumbling down the rock face opposite, its setting offers a different rhythm to the city—somewhere to pause between adventures.

It is easy to see why this café earned a special place in our memories.

Yet ask me what made the trip unforgettable, and the answer reaches far beyond the landmarks.

There were five hundred steps down from Namsan Tower at one in the morning. Eighties songs sung in an Uber on the way back to our accommodation. Steep streets in heavy rain, with no umbrella, on our way to the *Rain Café.

There were morning coffee rituals at Mega Coffee, too—the sort of ordinary pleasure that becomes extraordinary because of where you are and who is beside you.

Singapore added another shared memory: seeing the Jewel Rain Vortex.

Together, these experiences became what I call my "little jewel moments".

Some were carefully planned by Mikaela; others arrived unexpectedly. All became part of our story.

There are still places in South Korea I hope to explore. My first visit has only strengthened my wish to return.

Marika sums it up in words that belong perfectly to this journey:

"A DREAM COME TRUE. SEOUL, MY SOUL."

CAPE TOWN - BEAUTIFULLY YOURS

As summer approaches, follow the ocean, discover the city's colour and find somewhere beautiful to linger.

There is something about Cape Town at this time of year. The days stretch a little longer, outdoor tables become more inviting, and an ordinary afternoon can turn into an occasion simply because nobody wants to go home yet.

November brings that delicious anticipation of summer. A beach bag waits by the door. Lunch becomes a leisurely affair. And somewhere between the mountains and the Atlantic, you begin to wonder whether you should have booked a few extra nights.

This month, our Crown Jewels journey follows Cape Town's coastal neighbourhoods, pauses beside its lively harbour and steps into streets filled with colour. Along the way, we discover beautiful places to stay—because where you wake up can become a memorable part of the journey.

CAMPS BAY & CLIFTON — FOLLOW THE OCEAN

With the Twelve Apostles rising behind it and the Atlantic opening out ahead, Camps Bay has a setting that invites you to stop and take it all in. Start with coffee and a view. Walk on the beach, feel the sand beneath your feet, or settle into a long lunch along the beachfront. Later, as the light changes on the mountains, find somewhere comfortable and watch the afternoon become evening.

Nearby, Clifton's four beaches offer their own coastal escape, tucked beneath the slopes and reached by steps leading down between the homes. Pack lightly, take your time and remember that the Atlantic's sparkling appearance comes with a decidedly refreshing temperature.

Some days are made for exploring. Others need little more than a towel, a good book and someone whose company you enjoy.

THE V&A WATERFRONT — LET THE AFTERNOON UNFOLD

Give the V&A Waterfront an afternoon without a strict finishing time.

Boats move through the working harbour, tables fill beside the water, and Table Mountain provides a backdrop that can still interrupt a conversation. Browse the shops, pause over lunch, or find a spot for a drink and enjoy the changing harbour scene.

There is pleasure in arriving with very little planned: a little shopping, something good to eat, perhaps another walk before heading back. Stay long enough and your afternoon outing may quietly become dinner.

SEA POINT — A LITTLE EVERYDAY MAGIC

Sea Point brings a different pleasure: the feeling of joining the city's daily rhythm.

Along the promenade, walkers, runners, families and friends share the seafront. You can head out with a destination in mind or simply follow the curve of the coast, stopping whenever a view deserves a little longer.

Away from the water, cafés and restaurants offer plenty of reasons to wander through the neighbourhood. A morning coffee, something delicious for lunch, a table for two later on—there is room here for both discovery and familiar routines. For travellers who enjoy having a neighbourhood around them, that combination of ocean air and city life is part of the appeal.

BO-KAAP — COLOUR WITH A STORY

Bo-Kaap's brightly painted houses bring an unmistakable splash of colour to a Cape Town journey. But the neighbourhood deserves more than a quick photograph.

Its Cape Malay heritage, Muslim traditions and food are part of the city's living story. Make time to learn about the community, perhaps through a local guide or a cooking experience that introduces the flavours and people behind the place.

Walk thoughtfully through these residential streets, ask before photographing people, and let curiosity take you beyond the colourful façades. The memories you bring home may be richer for it.

SOMEWHERE BEAUTIFUL TO COME BACK TO

After a day discovering Cape Town, there is another pleasure waiting: returning to a place that feels like your own for a while.

Perhaps it is an apartment with an ocean-facing balcony, where breakfast stretches into a second cup of coffee. Perhaps it is a villa with space for friends to gather, a dining table for shared meals and a pool that persuades everyone to postpone their plans.

Through our photographs and films, discover beautiful places to stay—and imagine your own time in Cape Town, we share a selection of properties from our VIP collection, each offering a different way to enjoy time in Cape Town.

Look beyond the rooms for a moment. Imagine opening the curtains, choosing your favourite chair or coming back with something delicious for supper.

And if your afternoon happens to involve a sunhat, a magazine and a view across the pool to the sea, you may decide that going nowhere is a very good plan indeed.

CALIFORNIA'S CALAVERAS COUNTY

POSTERITY CIDERWORKS

Old Roots - Something Worth Discovering
An orchard's next chapter, poured by the glass.

A glass of golden cider catches the sunlight. Beyond it, fruit hangs among the leaves, waiting for someone to reach up and gather it. It is a simple scene, but an inviting one: the promise of an afternoon with nowhere urgent to be, something interesting to taste and a story worth staying to hear.

In California's Calaveras County, Posterity Ciderworks offers a reason to pause. Based in Mokelumne Hill, the husband-and-wife business makes sparkling ciders, meads and co-ferments using local fruit, honey and foraged ingredients. Apples, pears and quinces bring different possibilities to the glass—and a connection to the landscape they came from. posterityciderworks.com

For our friend and Dreamcatcher Mentor Roger Hicks, however, the memory that stayed with him was a very human one.

Roger knows what he likes—and readily admits that his palate can be difficult to please. During his visit, Ian took the time to explore what might suit him. That willingness to listen, offer alternatives and keep looking made an impression.
"I will always remember the kid trying to find something I would like," Roger told us.

It is a small moment that says a great deal about a visit. A tasting becomes more personal when someone takes an interest in the person holding the glass. Roger remembered the pleasant atmosphere, but above all he remembered the effort.

Behind that welcome lies another story of patient attention.

Brendan and Kris Barnard describe a cider-making philosophy rooted in heritage fruit and minimal intervention. Much of their fruit comes from previously abandoned heirloom orchards, reclaimed in collaboration with local families. Their own planting choices also look ahead: they favour full-size, longer-lived trees, accepting a slower start with future generations in mind. Brendan tends the orchards and makes the cider; Kris looks after operations, sales and marketing.

There is something quietly compelling about Posterity Ciderworks idea. An old fruit tree can become so familiar that it disappears into the scenery. Giving its harvest a purpose offers another way to value it—and another reason to keep it standing.

That was part of what appealed to Roger*: the sense of people taking an interest in what already exists, rather than simply chasing the next fashionable thing.*

For the visitor, the pleasure is in discovering how much there is to notice. The colour of a pour. The aroma rising from the glass. The conversation that follows when something tastes different from what you expected.

Posterity recommends tulip-shaped or wine glasses to help carry those delicate aromas. Its fruit is processed into juice at the Mokelumne Hill cidery*, rather than arriving as prepared juice or concentrate. These are details that make the journey from orchard to glass feel close and tangible.*

Photographs tell their own part of the story: a picking pole carried across golden grass, fruit gathered into harvest bins, sculpted branches forming door handles, and glasses lined up along a wooden counter. Together, they suggest a place best approached with curiosity and a little time to spare. Perhaps that is the invitation here. Arrive ready to discover something. Let someone guide you through a tasting. Ask about the fruit, the trees and the bottle in front of you.

Posterity Ciderworks - You might find a new favourite cider. Like Roger, you might leave remembering the person who helped you look.

Discover more and check current tasting-room details at Posterity Ciderworks. With thanks to Roger Hicks for sharing his visit and photographs.

A CLOSER LOOK AT THE CIDER

At Posterity Ciderworks, the story starts long before the first pour. Fruit gathered into harvest bins and a picking pole carried across golden grass offer a glimpse of the work behind each glass.

If you stop in for a tasting, ask which fruit went into the cider you're trying. Then ask the person pouring which one they'd choose for themselves. You might leave with a favourite you'd never have picked on your own.

Your Journey Your Words

With Zachary Reichel

Turning travel memories into stories worth sharing - November's guest writing mentor

When Marika shared her South Korea photographs with us, I wanted to know what she remembered about the moments around them. There's often a story in the things we tell a friend afterwards, like a small kindness, a wrong turn, or a meal we still talk about.

That's why I invited Zachary Reichel, the writer behind The Reichel Letters and creator of the 7 Essays in 14 Days workbook, to join us as November's guest writing and Dreamcatcher Network Mentor. His workbook caught my attention because it gives people a way to start writing. I asked Zach to help our readers turn a travel memory into a short story they'd enjoy sharing.

CHOOSING A MEMORY:

Which memory would you start with? Imagine you've come home with a phone full of photos and a notebook full of places. How do you choose the moment worth writing about?

The moment worth writing about is the moment only you could have lived on that trip. Plenty of people visit scenic vistas and take snapshots of those sights, but what about the photos you take of the random finds you discover walking from place to place? People like travel stories not because of the locations themselves, but because of the tales of joy and happenstance they can imagine discovering on their own travels. Share those kinds of tales with others.

Bringing the memory to life

What are three small things a first-time writer can do to make a travel memory come alive on the page? If an example comes to mind, we'd love to include it.

Capture the scene, explain the emotions, and describe the details.

For instance, my last vacation was a year ago, a trip with friends and loved ones to the mountains of Tennessee for my sister's wedding party. I snapped some photos of the place we stayed: a cozy cabin in the mountains, only accessible by a narrow, winding road through the grassy slopes.

To share the stories of that space, I'd write to you about the crisp, chill air that came in low gusts through the small cracks in the wooden walls, or the warmth of the moonshine in everyone's bellies and the fireplace crackling in the shared living room. I'd talk about how I repaired a leaky washing machine when a friend needed to clean a stain from a shirt, only for their desire for cleanliness to nearly flood the basement, earning me my "handyman" reputation for the trip!

In that passage, I capture the scene of the place we rented, the emotions of being around friends and family during a time of celebration, and even some personal moments you never expect to happen on a trip but inevitably find.

Ten minutes with a favourite photo

Could you give our readers one short writing prompt? Something they can try in ten minutes with a favourite travel photo would be lovely.

In ten minutes, I think anybody can write a short paragraph about a photo they snapped while traveling. Take a few minutes to look at the picture and recall how the photo, and the place where you took it, made you feel. Recall all the signals your senses picked up in that moment.

Then write a few sentences about those sensations. What did the sand between your toes feel like? What did the drink you were holding in that picture taste like with each sip? Answer those questions in sentences that explain it to the reader in whatever language you can muster.

"Close the paragraph with a line that tells us how all those sensations made you feel. Make those emotions clear and stand by them." — Zachary Reichel

Share your own Hidden Gem

Marika and Mikaela's South Korea adventure began with memories they wanted to share. Your own photographs may hold the beginning of another story. Try Zach's exercise with one favorite image, then tell us about the place or moment that stayed with you.

Share your story with Claudia

Your "Memories in the Making"

Why writing matters to Zach

What drew you to helping people write, and what do you hope they'll take away from your newsletter or workbook?

Writing got me out of many dark places growing up. I never fit in with many of my peers, and I faced a lot of ostracizations from family because I wanted to write rather than pursue "better" paths. Funnily enough, writing saw me through the various paths I tried to follow to make others happy, because it helped me organize my thoughts and exercise my creative muscles.

That's why I believe everyone should know how to write, at least a little, because it's the best way we have as humans to organize our minds and share those thoughts with others, no matter the time or distance between us. I cover the best ways I've found to do that in my weekly newsletter, The Reichel Letters (zacharyreichel.com), where every Wednesday I share about 3,000 words of frameworks, processes, and how-to's that anyone can use to start writing more.
